The athletes named here are not the final list of those who will definitely compete at the Sochi 2014 Olympic Winter Games. Each National Olympic Committee will confirm their final list of athletes between January 28 and February 5, 2014.

MEN:

The top 38, with each nation allowed a maximum of 3, after five of five races.[2] The two additional quotas are also listed India and South Korea (the next two unrepresented nations) get the additional quota spots, as no nations were able to use them to complete a relay. Slovenia and Great Britain rejected their quota spots. The next three nations in the rankings (Bulgaria, Netherlands and Chinese Taipei) received the quotas. Netherlands rejected their quota, Hungary received that one.

DOUBLES:

The top 18, with each nation allowed a maximum of 2, after five of five races.[3] The two additional quotas are also listed. Romania receives one of the team relay allocations to complete a team. No other team can use a doubles sled, so the last spot goes to Kazakhstan (the next best ranked nation without representation).

WOMEN:

The top 28, with each nation allowed a maximum of 3, after five of five races.[4] The additional quotas are also listed. Czech Republic receives one of the team relay allocations to complete a team. No other team can use a women's sled, so the last spot goes to Kazakhstan (the next best ranked nation without representation).
